

With component teams, the overhead of a project manager is required to coordinate and see to completion a feature that spans component teams and functional teams.

With component teams, there is increased multitasking, as one component team may work on several features in parallel, in addition to handling defects related to "their" component. Multitasking is one of the wastes in lean thinking, and correlated with reduction in productivity.